LEARNING BEYOND THE CLASSROOM

When Grade 9 learners at Tumaini Junior School were asked to identify a challenge in their neighbourhood, many mentioned the poor disposal of household waste. Plastic bottles, food remains and paper were often thrown into open spaces. During the rainy season, some of the waste blocked drainage channels, causing water to collect near homes.

Their Social Studies and English teachers guided them to investigate the problem. The learners interviewed residents, observed affected areas and recorded the types of waste they found. They discovered that some materials could be reused or recycled, while food remains and other biodegradable waste could be composted.

The class then organised a clean-up and awareness campaign. They placed labelled waste containers at agreed collection points and prepared posters explaining waste separation. A local recycling group agreed to collect suitable plastic and paper. Families were encouraged to make compost from kitchen and garden waste for use in home gardens.

The project was not without difficulties. Some residents were reluctant to change their habits, and the learners had to explain the benefits of proper waste management patiently. They also learnt that a clean-up alone would not solve the problem unless people changed their daily practices.

At the end of the activity, the learners presented their findings to parents and community leaders. They recommended regular waste collection, more public bins and continued environmental education. The experience taught them that classroom learning becomes more meaningful when knowledge is used to address real problems.
